

The George Hotel, Inveraray

The establishment dates back from 1770, when two private houses were merged. Six years later, the 5th Duke of Argyll ordered that the ground floors of each be made into churches for the Gaelic and English speaking congregations. Those churches are now the bar and lounge.

The owners of the hotel, the Clarks have stayed in the hotel for eight generations.

The George has always had an enviable reputation for ambience, friendliness and its cuisine. In the menu you will find the very best of local quality, well hung West Highland beef and lamb, seafood and fish bought from the local fishing port of Tarbert, famous Loch Fyne salmon and their very own speciality Langoustine's. The hotel catches their own Langoustine's and pictured below is owner Kris Clark.

Kris states "At the George hotel we have the best quality locally supplied food to serve our customers with and to keep the food fresh we rely on Albannach Einnseanair Ltd to maintain our refrigeration systems. Alan and his staff are very reliable and efficient. It's always good to know if we have a problem one of their team is only a phone call away."
